

Charles 'Cory' Spencer

This is a completed assignment for my Design 263 class.

This was produced in Adobe Illustrator CS6.

The assignment was to design a logo for a company's product, real or imagined.

I chose to redo the emblem for Ford Motor Company's Falcon automobile.

This is a modern rendition of an old favorite vehicle.

The next piece is a brochure I designed at Walla Walla Community College.

The assignment was to produce a brochure for a local town to use for their tourist office.

The photos were provided by my instructor.

This brochure is a lot busier than I would normally make, but we had to prove we could use the various tools available in Adobe InDesign. Each element added to the point total.

The City Council of Weston awarded me with a cash prize for this brochure.

The Little Boy Fountain

What was once lost has been returned. Fed by pure mountain spring water the “Little Boy Fountain” was removed by the state in the late 1940’s. It took until 1962 to get the fountain returned to Weston, making a pleasant center-piece for a small park.

WESTON OREGON

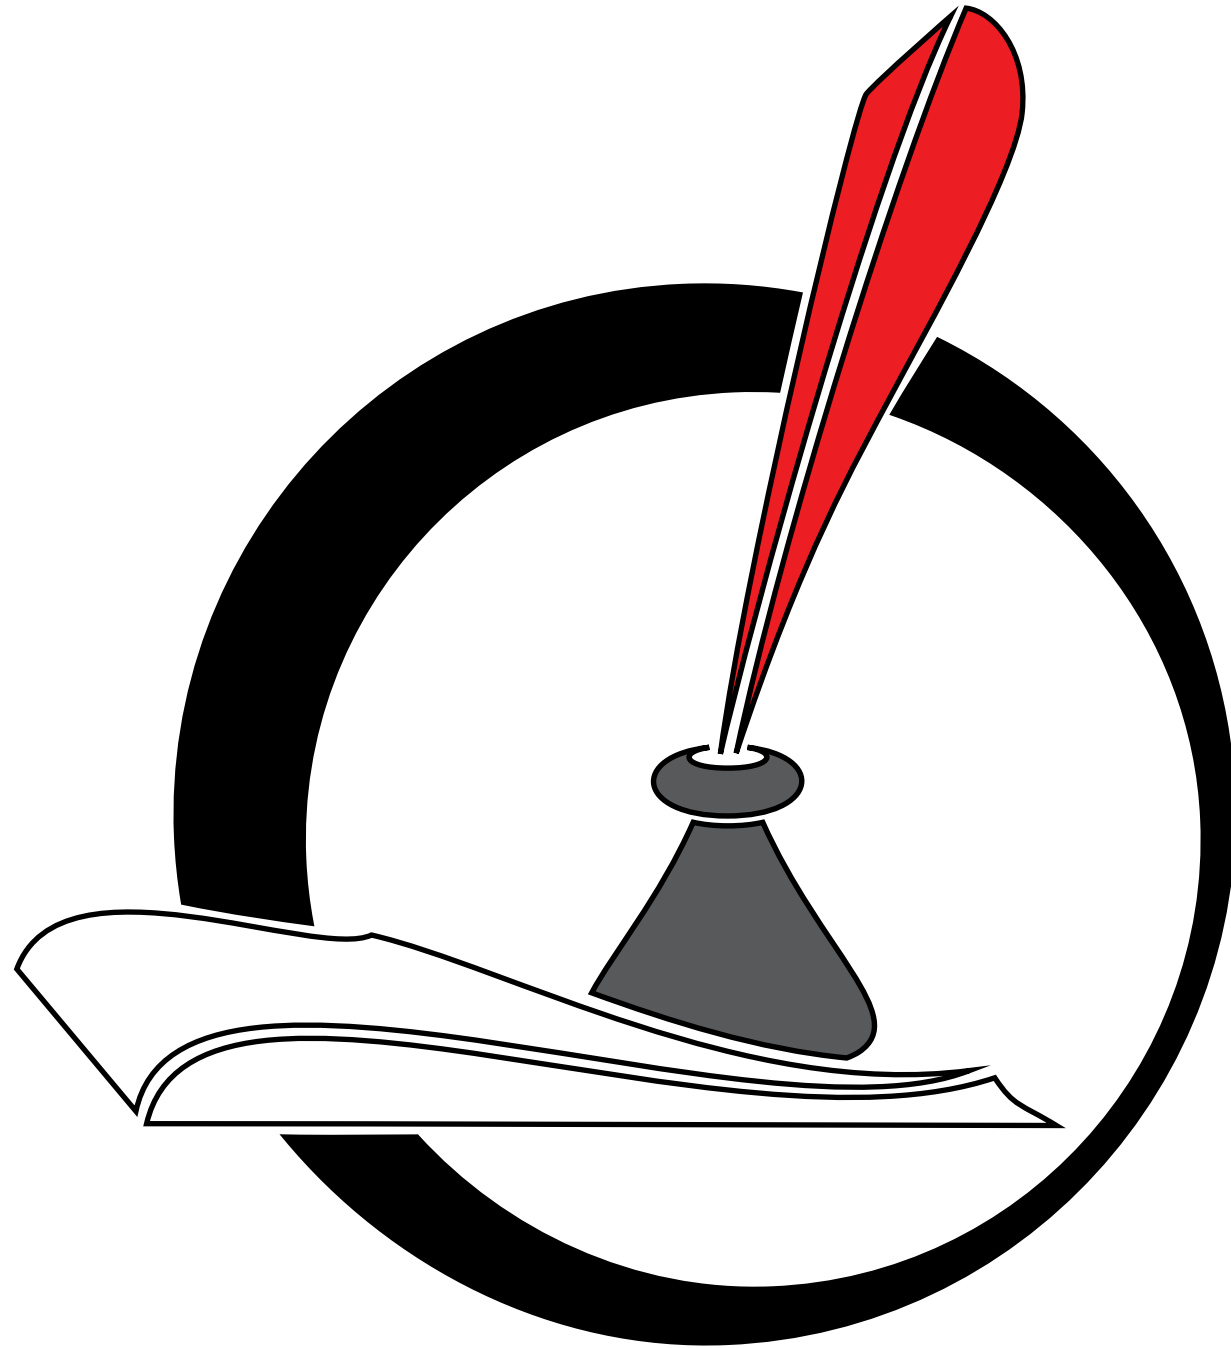

Located 32 miles from Pendleton Oregon and I-84, South of Walla Walla Washington, by 27 miles. Weston was established in 1878 in wheat country and was well located for Smith Frozen Foods to set-up a base of operations

This is a logo I designed for the Eastern Washington University's English department newsletter that my group in Intro to Technical Communication tendered as our contribution for our final project.

I used traditional symbolic elements of writing to demonstrate the English department's long history and I used a modern stylistic treatment to illustrate the future of English academia.

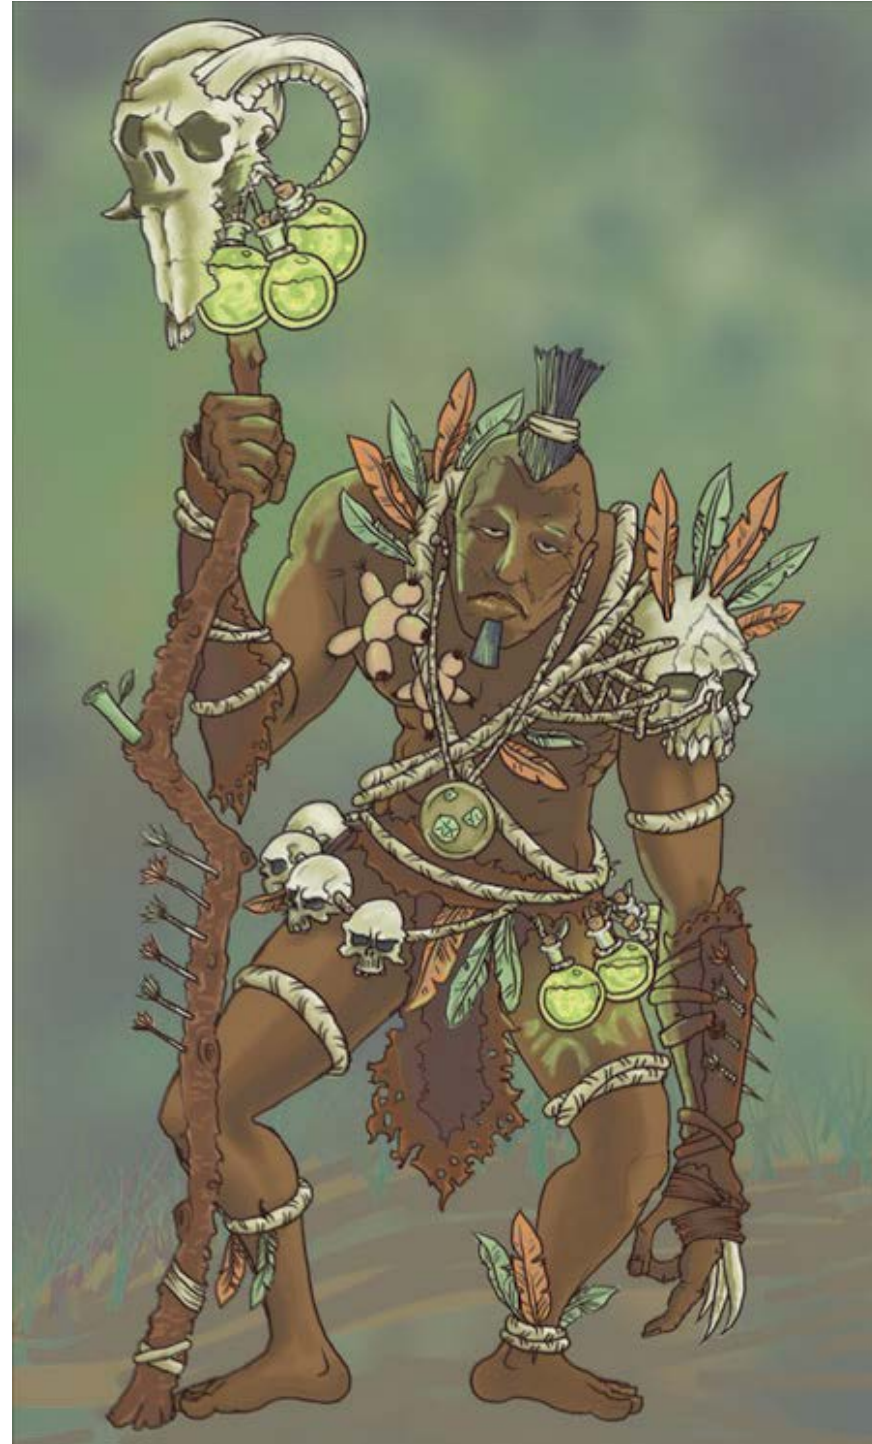

This is my final Adobe Illustrator project for Design 216. My class assignment was to reproduce a painting. I reproduced the Great Wave off Kanagawa. It was a challenge, but I learned a lot from this project.

Hokusai's The Great Wave off Kanagawa as reproduced by C. Cory Spencer

Here I was tasked to complete a Photoshop tutorial I chose on a website that my instructor directed the class to.

Wanting to gain as much from this opportunity as I could I chose another challenging piece of art. I gained experience in masking and blending tones to give a rounded presence to the art. I have always wanted to produce art like this to illustrate my writing.

In the Winter of 2012 I attended a traditional drawing class. As a final project the class was asked to create some art for a coffee operetta. The art needed to be coffee themed. Using pastels on paper I drew Gods Coffee Break. It is the first piece of art I've ever sold.
